PERCOLATER BUSTS UP FAMOUS LOVE AFFAIR

BOY KILLS FATHER

Vineland, N. J., Aug. 27.—Henry Garton today gave himself up to the police after admitting that he had killed his father, E. R. Garton, a wealthy horseman, to prevent the murder of his mother.

Mother and son tell the same story. The older Garton had been drinking. He came home, and engaged in a violent dispute with his wife. Henry, who is only 21, left the room, believing his mother could pacify his father.

Then the older Garton also left the room, and returned with a small kitchen knife. He threatened his wife with it. She screamed. Her son heard here, and rushed to the room.

Father and son grappled and went to the floor. They fought for at least 15 minutes, each striving to gain some advantage. At last the father got the upper hold on his son, and was slowly choking him to death.

The son felt the kitchen knife lying by his side. He managed to grasp it, and stabbed his father in jugular vein. The father died instantly.

The mother who had watched the whole fight became hysterical and could not be calmed for hours.

St. Louis, Aug. 27.—The romance of Ralph Chesley Ott, $10,000 a year artist, and his beautiful young wife, formerly Miss Jane Schaufert, has been busted all to pieces by a low, common coffee pot.

Just in case you don't remember the story of Ralph and his beautiful wife, with which the Sunday newspapers were filled a little over a year ago, we'll repeat it.

Ralph was in St. Louis, wearing Windsor ties and pensive looks, when he met Miss Schaufert, who was a model.

They fell in love—deeply in love. They married, and then came the feature that all the yellow Sunday newspapers grabbed up and gave pages to.

The new Mrs. Ott declared that some odd 5,000 years ago, she had been an Egyptian princess and Ott her humble lover. They were having a good time on the banks of the Nile, she said, when her pop, who was then pharaoh of Egypt, found them.

Pop put the humble lover in jail, or bumped him off, or something of the sort, and the princess died of a broken heart.

But, she explained, the Egypt-
